FEATURES OF THE FEAST.

Ceremonies Consecrated to Dual Deliverance
A Parade of Foreigners. Participants Followed by Eloquent Orators.
From the Chihuahua Mail.

Saturday, the 16th inst., was a red letter day in Chihuahua. Many years ago, one Hidalgo, a Spanish priest, organized and led a rebellion against oppression and practical slavery which culminated in a free republic in the footstool of kings, and a disenthralled and happy people where oligarchy reigned unto itself eternal sway. Years have gone since then, but every season has brought its new evidence of how wise was the patriot's dream, how blest to his country the martyrdom of that lone deliverer who, seeing through the darkness the possible dawn, gave his life for its coming. The martyr's fever made sacred his blood has been revered and almost canonized in every chapter of life's work, and hence upon each recurring anniversary of Hidalgo's holy protest against the longer bondage of his people, from the Rio Grande and the mountains of the north to the waters of the ocean and the gulf of national patronage, the chorus of gratitude and praise is borne on every breeze, and thousands of thankful hearts and earnest lips invoke God's rest and blessing on the hero who loved life less than his country's future, and who feared more than death the evils of his condition.

And without further occasion for exercises of honor or display, Chihuahua would have remembered becomingly the birthday of her freedom, but besides honoring one deliverer from political bondage, she was welcoming another from a bondage almost as appalling. The first train over the Mexican Central railway arrived in this city on the previous evening, and at an early hour the next morning the governor and other civic authorities, accompanied by a regiment of cavalry, a regiment of infantry, five pieces of artillery and about six thousand citizens in carriages, on horseback and on foot, escorted from the executive mansion to the commodious pavilion which had been provided for the occasion at the depot grounds, and after the artillery had fired several salutes of welcome, the regular order of exercises commenced.

Pablo Ochoa, a young attorney of much prominence, had been selected as orator of the day and the eloquent address with which he welcomed the great modern civilization fully showed the appropriateness and good judgment of the selection. Our space forbids any attempt to summarize the speaker's eloquent words, but when he had finished it was the universal opinion that nothing had been left unsaid which was appropriate to the occasion. Higinio Munoz was the next speaker on behalf of the city and state authorities, and at the conclusion of his remarks, Governor George A. Anthony addressed the multitude assembled on behalf of the railroad company, with that ease and elegance of diction for which he is so proverbial. As a marker of phrases the governor has few equals in the west, and his speech in response to the words of welcome uttered by the orators who preceded him was one of his happiest efforts. He was followed by Mr. Nickerson, a son of the ex-president of the Santa Fe road, in a few well chosen remarks.

At the conclusion of the last address the line of march was again formed and the immense throng returned to the city and dispersed. It was the largest gathering that ever assembled in honor of any event in Chihuahua, and each individual seemed fully to appreciate the direct good that the advent of the road had brought to all. In the afternoon the streets, and particularly the plaza, were filled with the thronging throngs of the day. Fully 2,000 visitors had come in on regular and special trains, and indeed it seemed that the neighboring states and territories had poured in their entire population.

In the evening a grand pyrotechnic was given from the southwest corner of the plaza, and later on an open air ball was indulged in front of the office of the Jefe de la Policia.

This ended the program for the first day. The succeeding days, barring the parade and speeches, have been as interesting as the first.

Vandalism.
Those who want to view Niagara Falls in its natural state, or anywhere near it, should make their visit there as soon as possible. It will not be very long now until the immediate neighborhood of Niagara will be covered with factories, tenement houses and their dependencies. One of the islands has already been ruined as a part of the landscape, and others are threatened. The bank all along the American rapids has been torn of foliage, of trees and vines, and covered with mills, barns and unsightly structures. In two years the youngest heir of the Goat Island estate will come of age, and the island will then be sold and covered with factories.

A Surprised Chicken.
A chicken at Alliance, Ohio, went to roost upon the axle of a freight car. During the night the car was attached to a train, and when the feathered biped descended from his unsightly perch he failed to recognize the scenes of his childhood. He was in Lima, Ind.
